I. Background Information

Brief History

Wilmette and Kenilworth are villages in Cook County, Illinois, along the North Shore, north of Chicago. Both villages are located in New Trier Township. The Great Chicago Fire of 1871 destroyed many Cook County records, including birth, marriage and death records.

Before European settlement, members of the Potawatomi tribe lived in the area. The village of Wilmette is named after Antoine Ouilmette, a French-Canadian fur trader who was married to a Potawatomi woman, and received land in present-day Wilmette for his part in signing the second Treaty of Prairie du Chien in 1829. In the 1840s, German Catholic farmers from the region of Trier, Germany began to settle in the area. They named their small village Gross Point. In 1848, Ouilmette sold his land to farmers and developers. In 1854, railroad tracks were built through the area, facilitating the settlement of the North Shore. The Chicago & Milwaukee Railroad constructed the first train station in the area in 1869. Just three years later, on September 19, 1872, the village of Wilmette was incorporated. The village of Gross Point was incorporated on the same date in 1874. Gross Point was annexed in two parts by Wilmette, in 1924 and 1926. Gross Point had been dependent on the revenues from the 15 taverns in town, and the village went bankrupt with Prohibition. See a longer history of Wilmette and Gross Point from the Wilmette Historical Society: www.wilmettehistory.org/history-wilmette

Kenilworth is the newest community on the North Shore, and was developed as a planned community. It was founded in 1889 when Joseph Sears purchased over 220 acres of land between the Chicago and North Western Railroad and Lake Michigan. Sears and his associates formed The Kenilworth Company to develop the ideal suburban village. The village was incorporated on February 4, 1896. See a longer history of Kenilworth from the Kenilworth Historical Society: <http://kenilworthhistory.org/history/>

Border Changes

- Wilmette and Kenilworth have always been part of Cook County. Cook County was created in 1831 from Putnam County. (For Cook County border changes, see the Atlas of Historical County Boundaries found on the Newberry Library website: <http://publications.newberry.org/ahcbp/>)
- Wilmette's village borders have changed many times throughout the years. The most significant changes occurred in 1924 and 1926 with the two-part annexation of Gross Point Village. A complete listing of all the border changes are listed in the appendix of Wilmette: A History by George D. Bushnell.
- Kenilworth's village boundaries have remained the same since its inception.

Places/Localities

- Cook County - Wilmette and Kenilworth have always been part of Cook County. The county was created in January of 1831 from Putnam County. Cook County includes the city of Chicago and many of its close suburbs. It is the second most populous county in the United States.
- North Shore - Refers to the villages along Lake Michigan, just north of Chicago. Includes the villages of Evanston, Wilmette, Kenilworth, Winnetka, Glencoe, Highland Park, Lake Forest and Lake Bluff. Occasionally the villages of Glenview, Northbrook, Deerfield, Highwood, Skokie and Northfield are also considered part of the North Shore, even though they don't border Lake Michigan.
- New Trier Township - About 16 square miles that is made up of the villages of Wilmette, Kenilworth, Winnetka, Glencoe and parts of Northfield and Glenview.
- Wilmette Village - A village of about 5.4 square miles, located just north of Evanston along Lake Michigan.
- Kenilworth Village - A village of about 0.6 square miles, located just north of Wilmette along Lake Michigan.
- Gross Point - A village of its own from 1874-1926. Village went bankrupt during Prohibition, and was annexed by Wilmette in two parts in 1924 and 1926.
- Plaza del Lago - Previously called "No Man's Land," and refers to a small unincorporated area between Wilmette and Kenilworth along Lake Michigan and Sheridan Road. It was largely undeveloped and unannexed for many years, until 1942 when it was eventually annexed by the village of Wilmette. The area is now home to a shopping center called Plaza del Lago and high-rise residences.

IV. Genealogical Sources - Original Records and Documents

Vital Records - Birth Records

- Birth records begin in 1872 (the Great Chicago Fire destroyed earlier records), but in the early years not everyone had a birth certificate registered with the county. Birth certificates were required starting in 1916, but counties were not fully compliant until about 1922. There is a 75 year moratorium on birth records for privacy reasons, except for immediate family members.

Census Records

- U.S. Federal Population Schedules are available for 1840, 1850, 1860, 1870, 1880, 1900, 1910, 1920, 1930, and 1940. No fragments of the 1890 census exist for Cook County.
  - The Cook County Non-population Schedules (Mortality, Industry, and Agriculture Schedules) are available for 1850, 1860, 1870 and 1880.
- Illinois State Census records are available for Cook County for 1855 and 1865.
- Census records have been digitized and are searchable through several online resources, such as FamilySearch, Moosetracks, FindMyPast, HeritageQuest, and Ancestry. In addition, several local repositories hold copies of the census on microfilm or in printed resources. Wilmette Public Library has access to census records through Ancestry.com and HeritageQuest subscriptions. *
- Census returns are released when they are 72 years old; new census records will be released once they meet this criteria.

Immigration Records

- Passenger lists and indexes can be found through:
  - Ancestry.com has a large number of passenger lists and other immigration records. *
  - LDS Family History Center - a large number of passenger lists and indexes on microfilm may be requested from the Family History Library or searched on FamilySearch.org.
  - National Archives Great Lakes - on microfilm. Includes ports of New York, Great Lakes and others.
  - Chicago Public Library - a few passenger lists on microfilm, and bound indexes for East Coast ports.
  - Newberry Library - some indexes for ports of New York and New Orleans.

* resources with an asterisk are available at the Wilmette Public Library.

Naturalization Records

- Records begin in 1871, and are released when the record is 100 years old. There are no Cook County naturalization records prior to 1871 because of the Great Chicago Fire. Naturalizations prior to 1906 were done in the local and state courts. After 1906, naturalizations were processed by the federal courts, and these federal records and indexes are typically found in various National Archives regional offices. Prior to 1922, married women obtained derivative citizenship when their husband was naturalized. After 1922, foreign-born women had to apply for their own citizenship.
- Indexes:
  - FamilySearch.org; Illinois, Northern District Naturalization Index, 1840-1950. Pre-1906 inquiries require the use of a surname's soundex code. <https://familysearch.org/search/collection/1838804> (Free)
